Meet the Gang from "Red River Jamboree"

A CBC Winnipeg production of songs, music and dances of the old west, seen regularly every Friday
on CBC-TV Network

ERNEST MUTIMER, producer

Stu Davis, Canada's cowboy troubadour, acts as host, singer and story teller on "Red River Jamboree." Stu is no stranger to audiences across the country after his long and successful runs on Swing Your Partner and Rope Around the Sun. As a youngster he collected cowboy songs and ballads and had an ambition to become a radio singer. He started in radio in 1938 at the age of 17 when he won a talent contest on a radio station in Regina. His singing career was interrupted when he joined the Air Force but continued following his discharge when he sang at the Calgary Stampede and later, on the advice of Wilf Carter, made several recordings in New York. Stu is a prolific song writer and has turned out some 200 songs, many of which he sings on his programs. His "What A Fool I Was," recorded in 1948 by Eddie Arnold, was one of the top ten western tunes of that year.

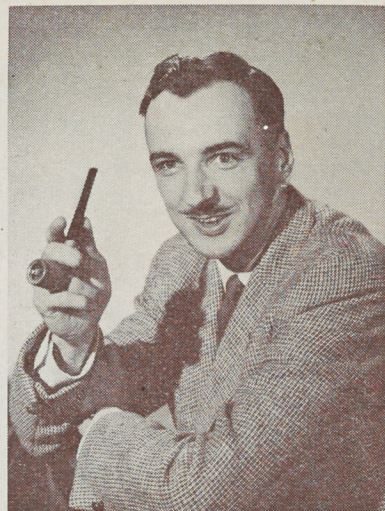

PEGGY NEVILLE

Peggy Neville may best be recalled as 50 per cent of the singing Neville Sisters who've performed on such network shows as Music Makers '58, Talent Caravan and The Show That Jack Built. Born and raised in Winnipeg, the Neville Sisters, Peggy and Barbara, began singing in their early teens at community dances and on amateur talent shows. This led to radio offers from both private stations and the CBC and a number of appearances followed. The girls made their TV debut on First Nighter, a local series produced by Ernie Mutimer.

On the 1958 New Year's Frolic show Peggy did her first spot as a single. Peggy finds working in the happy-go-lucky western air of Red River Jamboree very relaxing and enjoyable.

Away from the cameras Peggy is busy modelling for two large Winnipeg agencies as well as singing frequently at banquets and conventions and on stage shows. She loves outdoor activities, can really ride a horse and enjoys most sports.

The Altones: A New Year's Eve dance — a girl friend singing with the band — a musician with an eye for talent — put them all together and a new quartet is born. Four of the original members of The Altones, Andy Anderson, Brian Flye, Olie Alto, and Bert Scinocca, were enjoying a dance at a Winnipeg night club where one of the boy's girl friends was singing. She talked the orchestra into letting them perform although they had never sung in public. Dick Carr, a guitar player with the orchestra, saw their potential and decided to write some vocal arrangements for the boys.

At one of their earliest rehearsal sessions they were kicking around musical talk and terms when the phrase "all the tones in music" came up. That gave them the inspiration for their name, "The Altones." The group did numerous charity shows and sang frequently at Jack's Place, a local nitery. They auditioned successfully at the CBC and made their debut on Cabaret in November, 1955. Since then they have had about 60 TV appearances including network spots

"Pit Cookers"

By KERRY WOOD

(Originally broadcast on "Outdoors with Kerry Wood," on CBC radio, July 30)

KERRY WOOD

LAST EVENING a bonfire's orange and red flames bloomed in our backyard. A robin scolded briefly, a catbird sounded a melancholy miaow, then a wren chirred a condemnation as it darted through the underbrush. When the poplar smoke spiraled up into the twilight, a purple martin plummeted down from the far sky where it had been hunting mosquitoes and veered through the hazy blue fumes uttering a chortling note which could have been either approval or protest.

But the neighbour's dog enjoys our bonfires. As the flames blossomed higher and brighter, Skippy came trotting over to boss the job. He took up his accustomed position, halfway between the fire and my woodpile. There he is very much in the way. But Skippy is a happy-natured spaniel who wags his tail on the slightest provocation, so I detoured willingly around his fat bulk to carry fuel to the blaze.

Skippy is quite used to our bonfires, because we light them two or three evenings a week throughout the summer. It is our method of cooking out-of-doors, not to be confused with the charcoal and grill systems so popular all over Canada. More than half the population of this nation's suburbia indulges in the sauce-annointed, hot-sizzle method of cooking steaks and chicken legs on a backyard barbecue, but our system is different. We cook in a sealed-off hole in the ground. And to do this, we have to burn a bonfire for over an hour, in order to fill the hole full of red hot coals.

If you want to get historical, there's nothing new about our method of tenderizing a hunk of beef, pork, lamb, or poultry. Those excellent chefs, the Chinese, were using sealed-heat ovens three or four thousand years ago and still know more about the system than anyone else. On many islands of the Pacific, Polynesians used hole-cookers long before white men's ships came exploring to their shores. Maoris of New Zealand place whole pigs in their pit-cookers, and South American Indians discovered that those large, tough lizards called iguanas could be rendered palatable if processed slowly in ground cookers. Mexicans copied the Indians and began using earth ovens. Or perhaps some Mexicans, were descended from Spanish gypsies, who favour the clay-ball cooker which is an adaptation of the ground-hole method.

In any case, the pit-cooker was introduced to North America by our Mexican neighbours. Vaquero cowboys have worked on many ranches north of the Rio Grande. These people love the fiesta, plus all the good eating associated with the gay celebration. And they soon demonstrated that the toughest of long-horned dogie cattle, when prepared in pit-cookers, turned out tender and delicious meat.

The first of the American ranchers to copy the Mexican system on a really large scale was a man named Campbell, whose ranch brand was a bar followed by his two initials, B and Q. Say it quickly in sequence, and you have Bar-B-Q. This gave the "barbecue" name to Campbell's method of pit-cooking. Mind you, that's not the origin of the "barbecue" word. It comes from the Spanish, and originally meant a framework of sticks on which to smoke, dry or broil meat. But for the last half century we've used that barbecue word to describe half a dozen styles of outdoor and indoor cooking, including the charcoal brazier, the whirling spit, and Mr. Campbell's copy of the Mexican method of cooking in a hole.

As Campbell and other American ranchers practise pit-cooking, large chunks of meat are first wrapped in clean cloths, then a coating of thick flour-paste is plastered over the cloth, and finally a protective shell of burlap is wrapped around the pastry bundle. Meat prepared in this fashion is lowered into a pit full of hot coals, a wooden or tin lid is flopped down over the top of the fire-pit, and then earth is shovelled on to seal in completely all the heat, smoke, and meat. Twelve or fourteen hours later, the pit is uncovered and the slow-cooked meats are found to be tender, juicy and flavoursome inside the crust of now hardened flour paste. Recently, many pit-cooking chefs have discarded the flour-paste coating in favour of aluminum foil, but the idea remains the same: to seal in all the natural flavours of the meat by tenderizing it slowly in an earth cooker.

My own interest in the method started many years ago, when I was drafted into the job of cooking a whole Hereford cow to serve at an old-timers' picnic. At the time, I didn't know anything about pit-cooking, but a friend sent me a description of Campbell's method of cloth-wrapping the meat, coating it with flour-paste, then using burlap as an outer insulation before popping it into a pitful of coals.

I experimented with this system in a small hole in our own backyard, and pulled out a completely raw roast of beef the first time, but got a perfectly cooked joint on the second try. As the date for the mass picnic drew near, I timed the long, long minutes required to wrap a roast in cloth, smear it thoroughly with flour-paste, then apply the protective burlap. Next I multiplied that time with the twenty-five roasts to be cut in large chunks from the defunct cow I'd be cooking, and it totalled out to a great many work-hours. Indeed, I'd spend more time wrapping the meat than it would spend in the pit-cooker.

So my wife and I started experimenting. Instead of using paste or even foil, we began wrapping meat in heavy waxed paper. In place of the protective burlap, we substituted several pages of wet newspaper, which kept the meat from scorching when first dropped into the terrific heat of the coal-filled pit. By happy accident, we stumbled onto a new twist to an old system. The Campbell method of paste-coating managed to seal in all the natural flavours of good meat, but our paper wrap achieved the same result, and, in addition, allowed smoke to penetrate the bundle. What our pit cooker produced was not only tender and juicy meat, but also permeated with a wonderful smokey flavour, stronger than the flavour gained on the very best of hickory-wood grill barbecues.

We experimented with different woods, soon learning that any fuel containing pitch is worthless—spruce, pine and fir impart a turpentine flavour to meats cooked in a sealed pit. But birch, oak, maple, hickory, alder, willow, and poplar are all excellent pit-cooking fuels, with my personal preference leaning towards poplar and willow because of the distinctive flavours these woods impart to meat. Now we burn mostly poplar in the back-

Russ Carrier to Ottawa

*One of CBW's first announcers ends
27-year radio career in West*

EARLY IN SEPTEMBER, CBC Winnipeg announcer Russ Carrier ends a 27-year career in western Canadian radio when he moves to Ottawa to take up new duties as an announcer at the CBC's studios there.

Born and educated in Prince Albert, Sask., Russ excelled from an early age in both sports, especially swimming, and music ("... my mother, a music teacher, saw to it that I practised the piano").

Russ' early successes in provincial singing competitions were remembered by the sponsors of a radio contest when Prince Albert's CKBI received its commercial license in 1933. He was asked to do a 15-minute program, and won first prize with his performances of two popular songs and an imitation of Maurice Chevalier. Russ was soon the star of his own weekly program, and by 1936 he had joined the station's staff.

Since then Russ has worked at CFQC Saskatoon, CJRC (now CKRC) Winnipeg, CJGX Yorkton (the studios were then in Winnipeg), CKX Brandon, and the original CKY Winnipeg, then operated by the Manitoba Telephone System.

When CKY was purchased by the CBC and became CBW, in 1948, Russ became an employee of CBC. It was eleven years earlier, however, that Russ made his CBC debut when, as a staff announcer in Prince Albert, he took part in one of CBC's first "outside broadcasts" from Prince Albert National Park.

One of Russ' long-standing assignments has been as announcer on Winnipeg's famous Prairie Schooner series, which began when Russ was on the CKY staff, and has continued, until recently, on the full CBC radio network. While at CKY Russ also became well known as the announcer on various concert programs, variety programs conducted by Geoffrey Waddington (now CBC's Director of Music), the popular two-piano broadcasts by Mitch Parks and Percy Burdett, Red River Barn Dance (a popular series recently returned to the air — Saturday afternoons on CBC), school broadcasts, and dramas produced by Esse Ljungh (now CBC's drama supervisor). Russ also acted in many of the plays produced by Mr. Ljungh.

During his years with CKY Russ won the Radio Magazine award for the best announcer in western Canada, and a popularity contest for announcers west of Toronto.

Broadcasting has always been Russ' first choice as a means of making a living, and although during the lean thirties Russ was forced at times to work as a lunch counter clerk, meat packinghouse employee, department store clerk, and door-to-door salesman, he always did these jobs in a locale where a radio job was in the offing.

Last year Russ started to make regular television appearances, and reports that he now feels quite at ease in front of the cameras. He is the announcer on CBC Winnipeg's Red River Jamboree (page 2).

In his spare time Russ likes to play the piano, golf, and picnic, swim and play ball with his four sons (11, 9, 7, and 2) and daughter (6).

CBWT Producer to Toronto For Network School Telecasts

Len Weinstein

In charge of CBWT school telecasts for several years, and a CBWT producer almost since the inception of the station, Leonard Weinstein will move to Toronto at the end of August to produce school telecasts for the full CBC-TV network.

Mr. Weinstein is an honours graduate from the University of Manitoba, with a Master's degree from the University of Minnesota. He joined the CBC in November, 1954, as a production assistant and was promoted to contract producer in June, 1957.

His first program as a producer, "Swing Your Partner" was a network summer replacement show that received two thirteen-week extensions. He has since produced a widely varying log of programs including "Rope Around the Sun," "Citizens' Forum," "Country Calendar," "Music Break," the Red River Fever and 7 Chairs documentaries, and the experimental school telecasts.

The CBC received an Ohio Award in 1958 for Mr. Weinstein's school broadcast on the Elizabethan Theatre.

Mr. Weinstein has also produced the last three University of Manitoba Glee Club shows, "Wonderful Town," "Wish You Were Here," and "Bells Are Ringing."

He takes up his new duties in the School Broadcast Department in Toronto early in September.—

Dennis O'Neill.

"Women Come To The Theatre." Until 1600, no women performed in the theatre. Boys took all female roles and Shakespeare never saw his women's parts played by women. Barry Morse describes how women broke into the theatre and reads from Pepys about "stage door johnnies." Morse plays a scene from Much Ado About Nothing. He plays Benedick and Toby Robins is Beatrice.

This week—"This Electronic World." To show the impact on this new technology on the pace and pattern of everyday living, The Electronic World presents eight unrelated events affected by one common factor—electronics. Memory training machines, direct long-distance dialing, robots of industry, deaf children attending specially-equipped classrooms, and electronic analysis of autopsy material are among the marvels of progress today. This half-hour journey into the electronic world was produced for television by the National Film Board.

Red River Jamboree's

"Ernie"

A visitor to a recent Red River Jamboree rehearsal would probably have been mildly surprised to see a strange, gangling figure of a man whirling chaotically amid members of the cast, doing what appeared to be the hybrid of a medicine man's mystery dance and a bubble dancer's calisthenics.

First reaction might have been that the producer of CBC Winnipeg's new western musical had taken leave of his senses and was trying maniacally to out-Sullivan Sullivan. But the producer was not crazy. He was whirling.

One might then be tempted to conclude that a producer who would pause to play the medicine man half way through a final rehearsal, or, on other occasions, sing, dance, play the piano, and if necessary stand on his head, is, in the words of the cliché, lost in his work. But the cliché in this case remains just that. "Total involvement" is not an accurate description of Ernie Mutimer's approach to his job as producer of Red River Jamboree. If you were to use this term he would react by choking merrily on his pipe and throwing it back to you encased in a suitably ribald comment. Then he might proceed to divest, with clinical disinterestedness, all the pretensions that seemed to be adhering to his show. This notwithstanding, he would at another time justifiably insist on its potential as top western entertainment.

This admixture of enthusiasm and detachment, combined with the ability to take a disparate handful of performers—the only experienced western artist being the star of the show, Stu Davis—and manipulate and mould them into a team that begins to exhibit high competence, explains in part the success Ernie Mutimer is having with a show which, both musically and literally, appears to be a serious blending of authenticity and corn. Like the world of "Juno and the Peacock," Ernest C. Mutimer is constantly in chassiss.

In fact he apparently makes a science out of chaos, to the extent that after every week of rush, retraction, and mental resuscitation, he comes through with a production that may be awarded the sometimes pleasant — sometimes dubious adjective, "slick."

Ernie, who on first acquaintance and before his summer crewcut, looks disconcertingly like the Manitoba version of a Bond street banker, will explain this by saying: "I like to be inspired." He will in turn — although once again it would be a mistake to classify him as a throw-back romantic — insist on stacking what he terms "inspiration" against organization every time. Watching the Friday night results you are inclined to take his word for it.

This was intended as a biographical sketch; thus, statistically speaking, the following should be said of Ernie Mutimer:

Born: December 14, 1924. (This year his birthday will be celebrated in the producer's chair on Red River Jamboree).

Marital status: one wife, four children.

Education: St. John's Collegiate, Winnipeg, the University of Manitoba (1949 B.A.), Lorne Greene's Academy of Radio Arts (from which he graduated with distinction and a scholarship in radio writing).

Experience: 1949, CJRL, Kenora, Ontario, as program director;

Bruno Walter at 84

A film of one of the world's greatest conductors in rehearsal at Vancouver Festival, and an interview by ALBERT GOLDBERG

BRUNO WALTER, one of the world's great conductors, is now 84. After 64 years of conducting he "felt it time to make a break—I decided to live a life of tranquility." Retired from the "allegro furioso of New York," he lives in Beverley Hills, Los Angeles.

At a Vancouver Festival, Dr. Walter made one of his infrequent public appearances to conduct the Vancouver Symphony. During rehearsals of Brahms' Symphony No. 2 in D, CBC cameras recorded the session. This film, together with an interview by Albert Goldberg, music critic of the Los Angeles Times, will be shown in a special 60-minute program on CBC-TV, Tuesday night, September 6th.

Dr. Walter was born in Berlin in 1876. By the time he was 24 he was conducting the Berlin State Opera—along with Richard Strauss and Karl Muck.

"As a young man I had difficulties (getting orchestral discipline)," he once told Goldberg in a New York Times interview. "But as one gets older, one acquires some reputation, the musicians get to like you and your work and they co-operate through goodwill. . . . I do not believe in tyranny in any field. Nothing can bloom under a dictatorship. Yet there are certain inexorable tyrannies in music and we are all under this command. But discipline is the wrong word in this connection. I have my way and others have theirs. I do not blame conductors who become impatient. It is their nature. If it is done for the sake of the music it is excusable."

To a younger generation, the span of Dr. Walter's experience can be startling. In one interview he remarked how as a lad he heard Beethoven's Ninth performed twice in the one night, adding that it was "a work which still had to fight for recognition in those days."

And perhaps few of that same younger generation would see any connection between the musical ability of a conductor and his moral and spiritual qualities. But Dr. Walter returns constantly to this theme during the Goldberg interview. "If a man is of warm heart and human qualities . . . the musicians will listen to him." "If a man does not love nature, does not love the meadows and the brook, he could not conduct Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony. . . ." Jazz "is an insult to me. I feel debased listening to it." "I'm always offended when I see in newspapers music included under 'entertainment,'" he says, talking of the religious element in music. "Music has a motive force of its own."

In an interview during World War II Dr. Walter said, "Evil always makes itself felt more violently than good (does). Good is passive, but its very passivity is active, in that while evil burns itself out with the very intensity of its fury, good is attracting strength and power, quietly but effectively."

This ethical element reflects itself in his work. Goldberg has said of his performance, "Warmth, gentleness and humanity suffuse his interpretations. No one else has exactly his style of searching expressiveness and plastic phrasing. He delves for the spiritual and emotional content of the music rather than for the precise realisation of the composer's printed text. Under his hands an orchestra always sings. . . . He is the poet of contemporary conductors."

"My life has been very rich," says Dr. Walter in the interview. "I had to go through some ordeals but I had much happiness. . . . All my life I had the blessings of music, so looking back I have the fullness of gratitude to the Higher Powers."

Host Gil Christie questions people involved in the case, the plaintiff and defendant (or in criminal cases the accused and the police) and sometimes witnesses—all these people are played by professional actors. The scene then shifts to the courtroom where real lawyers present their side of the case to the judge. After the courtroom scene, a group of four panelists, all of them laymen with no more knowledge of the case than is possessed by the viewer, discuss the legal arguments among themselves, give their opinions and decisions, and question the judge (no longer in his courtroom robes) on points that interest or puzzle them. The judge then gives his decision.

yard hole, and perhaps I should get back to that bonfire which Skippy-dog was watching last night. It takes one or two hours of steady firing to fill a three foot square hole almost full of glowing hot coals. Once the coals are finally heaped up near the top, then you can prepare the meat. It may be beef or lamb, pork or poultry, fish, or, if you want to experiment, a potful of beans or even a raisin-filled plum pudding. Let's make it meat, a family sized chunk weighing four to eight pounds. The only pre-cooking treatment required is a liberal dosing of salt and pepper all over the meat's surface. Then wrap it in a sealing coat of three or four layers of heavy waxed paper. Next comes the insulation wrap of several sheets of full-sized newspaper. Use more of this insulation wrap for small bundles than for large roasts, to prevent over-cooking a small serving. Once the newspaper is around the meat bundle, hold the package under a water tap and soak the outside thoroughly. The soggy exterior of the bundle prevents the meat from scorching.

Now comes the moment to pop it into the central part of the hole-cooker. Put a length of board or an iron rod across the pit to support weight, then place a sheet of plywood or a square of tin over the hole. The cover must be large enough to overlap, so that the pit-head is completely covered. Of course, smoke and steam will pour out from under the edges of the tin. That's why a thick layer of earth must be shovelled on top of the tin, to seal in all heat and smoke. When using a large pit to cook a thousand pounds of meat or more, the earth layer has to be around twelve to fifteen inches thick. But for a family sized pit-cooker in the backyard, six or eight inches of moist earth will be sufficient to seal in all heat and smoke.

Leave the meat bundle in the pit for at least twelve hours, then dig it out and you'll be pleasantly surprised at its flaky tenderness and the entirely new, delightful smokey flavour. The meat will still be sizzling hot, even though there's no live coals left in the pit. In actual fact there's no more burning, once the sealing earth has been shovelled on top of the tin covering, because the oxygen supply is shut off. The cooking is done by the heat already trapped inside the covered hole.

All the coals in the pit turn into charcoal after the oxygen is shut off, so you've got a pit that's ready for more cooking as soon as you re-light the charcoal fuel. I've done as many as six cookings in rotation, after the first two-hour spell of burning. I just light the charcoal heaped high in the pit, wait a quarter hour until it is glowing red, and then pop in another meat bundle and seal it away a second, third, or fifth or sixth time. Of course, the subsequent meat bundles should be smaller than the first large roast, because the heat

"Dinky Pinky"—Dinky Pinky is in disgrace because he has no deep trumpeting call. He goes away and joins a symphony orchestra. His voice breaks and he returns to the forest with the biggest trumpet blast of all the herd. "Bike Race" — two little bears, Threadbare and Camenbert, enter a bike race. Chief competitor is Rabbit, but the Rabbit is so sure of himself that he falls asleep and loses the race.

On Radio Wednesday NightMusic of India

A program of music, interviews and comments

On September 7th and 14th, CBC Wednesday Night broadcasts a series of two 80-minute programs on the Music of India, prepared and presented by Dr. Rosette Renshaw of McGill University and the University of Montreal.

Each program will contain at least 50 minutes of music, as well as interviews with musicologists and musicians from India and explanatory comments by Dr. Renshaw herself.

What sort of experience awaits the uninitiated listener whose ear is accustomed only to western music? The program's scope is broad: although Dr. Renshaw's special field of study was Indian classics, she has included film, folk and devotional music too, in order to make the selection representational. Dr. Renshaw, whose studies in India were jointly sponsored by UNESCO within the framework of its major project for the Mutual Appreciation of East-West Cultural Values, and the Indian government's Ministry of Scientific Research and Cultural Affairs, is reassuring on the question of the layman's reaction to Indian music.

"One of the aims of the whole program," she says, "is to debunk some of the mystery that permeates our thinking where India is concerned. For all their fakirs staring cross-legged into the sun, Indians are remarkably like Canadians in many ways and India is not entirely unlike Canada. While there, I found maple trees and pines and masses of people going to work from nine till six. There's nothing very mysterious or occult about that; so why should we think of their music as something eternally shrouded in impenetrable symbolism and mystery?"

At the same time, the listener would be well advised to expect something different to the point of startling. "Indian music seems to be essentially two-dimensional, having only melody and rhythm," she says. "Percussion and drone, incidentally, are part and parcel of the Indian musical scene."

Possibly the one characteristic which accounts for the apparent "sameness" of Indian music to the occidental ear is its lack of modulation. Western music is seldom still in this respect; it is constantly changing key and chord structure. Indian music develops the possibilities of a single "raga" (a melodic line), often for 30 minutes on end without modulation or harmony of any kind. It is this lack of modulation and absence of harmony that tends to jar on the western ear.

The music you will hear on these two programs is, like all Indian music, based on ragas — a raga being a melodic form of which there are thousands (theoretically, their number is infinite; but in practice only about 150 are used by the experts, of which 50 are employed by all musicians). These ragas are based on (a) the 72 parent scales and (b) ascending and descending fixed modal scales. Each raga has its own character, colour and mood which build, or so it was believed, an atmosphere appropriate to morning or evening. There were, therefore, "morning" ragas and "evening" ragas and it was inadmissible to

Two Legends

"The Temple of Prosperity"—All India Radio

"The Ballad of John Axon"—BBC

On Sunday radio, September 4, Venture presents two modern legends, one about an event that has changed the lives of millions of people, another about one that affected just a few. Both are unusually thrilling and dramatic, told by the actual people concerned. The Temple of Prosperity was prepared by All India Radio, The Ballad of John Axon is a BBC production.

Close to an outcropping of the Himalayas at Bhakra in Pakistan, lies a village under sentence of death. Its 175 families go about their daily business as usual in their thatched, terraced houses, but there is a sad resignation in the faces of the old people as they accept the inevitability of progress. Just a mile away work thunders ahead on the symbol of new India: the largest irrigation scheme ever attempted. Diesel engines hiss like ganders, compressor chippers scream, as huge concrete mixers growl their way through nine million tons of concrete, while the highest straight gravity dam in the world climbs as high as a giant skyscraper. When it goes into operation this month it will become the highest man-made waterfall, giving a new lease on life to 10 million acres of thirsty land, but gobbling up 378 villages at the same time, the homes of 36,000 people, and many ancient beauty spots, including the Temple of Prosperity.

The Temple has stood a long time waiting for prosperity, has watched emaciated armies of peasants kneeling before it to pray for rain, pledging all they owned for a bowl of water. Now, drowned in the valley's new lifeblood, the Temple is sacrificed to such prosperity as the villagers never dreamed of. Of course the villages disappearing under the water will rise again somewhere else, as their inhabitants start life anew under the government's wing, in a sudden plunge towards progress unequalled in India's history.

India is extremely proud of the fact that of the 300 engineers and 12,000 workers involved in this colossal undertaking, all but 10 are Indian. They have made the operation as self-sufficient as possible, turning out nearly everything they use right on the spot in labs and engineering plants, with a four-mile conveyer belt system to move it along. In this poetic documentary you will hear the whole story of how and why the dam has been built, and about the throbbing plenty it will offer the countryside when it roars into operation this month.

The Ballad of John Axon is the moving story of a railway engineer who died trying to stop a collision. It is told by his wife and companions in natural, unscripted Today—"Mr. Wilson's Sister." Mr. Wilson's visiting sister reads Treasure Island to Dennis and Tommy. Wilson, plagued by the presence of the children in his home, draws a fake treasure map which gets the boys out in the yard digging, but later proves to be a self-made trap for Mr. Wilson.

Cariboo Country

This week—"Who Hunts O'Mara?" O'Mara was a murderer—there was no doubt about it, although if the only man he had shot had been Rogers, you might not have thought so. Everybody in the Namko country knew Rogers was no good, and if O'Mara had just shot Rogers and left it at that, why, the Namko ranchers might not have gone hunting for O'Mara. More likely they would have paid him a bounty. But it became a different matter.

speech, and in folk song and music written by Ewen MacColl.

On February 9, 1957, Axon was driving a heavy freight train out of Buxton, in England's Derbyshire Peak District. The journey started with a hard, uphill pull that required everything the engine could give, as well as a bank engine shoving heartily behind. Once over the top the track descends steeply almost all the way into Manchester, and the train needed heavy checking by wagon brakes and a powerful steam brake to avoid running away. This morning, just before the train reached the summit, the steam pipe to the brake valve burst. As the cabin filled with scalding steam Axon and his fireman were forced back to the tender, where, unable to warn the bank engine of the accident, they stood helpless as the train ground slowly to the top of the hill, and then began to rush at breakneck speed down the other side. Axon ordered the fireman to jump, but he himself stayed on the train's footplate throughout the nightmare run, probably hoping to have a chance to get control of the engine down the line, where the track levelled out briefly before plunging down again. But at Chapel-en-le-Firth, tearing along at terrifying speed, Axon's train crashed into another freight train, killing him and the other train's guard and crushing cars like matchboxes.

FRENCH NETWORK HIGHLIGHTS

Television

LE MOULIN AUX IMAGES

"I may not be a fortunate man, but what I have I share gladly!" Said in a strong French meridional accent, this reflects the attitude of Pierre, a popular and certainly original character who plays a big part in the French weekly "Moulin aux Images" on Wednesday evenings at 6:00. Pierre (alias Andre Cailloux) has but a windmill and a mule. And when he isn't arguing with his Cadichon, he is telling stories to the children such as only he can dream up.

The second part of the program features "Sautapic," a gentle and amiable fellow whose only passion is travelling. Of course, he goes about it in an original sort of way, always getting out of his car from the top, for example, but he does manage to provide very interesting moments for the young listeners, with the filmed documentaries he picks at random on his never-ending trips. "Why such a fantastic character for so serious business?" the producer was asked. "Precisely," said he, "because the children like to see themselves in his every mood, every question. And since children are such natural-born clowns . . ."

MUSIC ON RADIO

By FRANK HAWORTH

We can hardly complain of any lack of enterprise on the CBC's part, or of any want of variety in the musical fare it has been providing during the summer season. During the past few weeks it has regaled us with dishes as diverse as ancient organum and ultra modern electronic experimentation, laced with generous servings of less common items from many sources, old and new — all adding up to valuable lessons for the serious students among us, and fascinating extensions of experience for the rest of us.

This highly commendable course is further pursued this week, with a demonstration of the Music of India in CBC Wednesday Night, featuring material gathered by the well-known Canadian musician Rosette Renshaw on a recent visit to that country. There has been a considerable upsurge of musical activity in India in recent years, especially in connection with filmmaking — but in the Western form of the art; for the paradoxical and ironical situation has developed, that just as Western musicians are becoming aware of, and seriously interested in Oriental music, Oriental musicians themselves are losing interest in it, and even, in some cases, condemning it as the barbarous bawling we used to think it was. (At the time of the revolution in Turkey the practice of the traditional music was actually prohibited; and Western-style symphony orchestras now flourish from Tel Aviv to Tokyo.)

However, the list of items in Miss Renshaw's program, with its solos on native instruments, suggests that it is the traditional aspect that is to be featured on Wednesday night. A difficulty that I personally have found in listening to this music is that standards of performance differ so radically from Western ideals, especially in the matter of vocal tone, that it is hard to judge the quality of either the performance or the music itself. (Perhaps I should add that the performers I have heard have possibly not been India's finest.) But it did appear that much of this essentially melodic music bore a striking resemblance to some forms of plainsong, with its free rhythms, modal-sounding tonality, and elaborate melismata with a limited range of notes; and some influence of one on the other might be traced. (One thing that did not appear was that it bore the slightest resemblance to popular notions of Indian music, as exemplified in Indian Love Lyrics and the like, or the imaginative productions of the Hollywood-Oriental school.)

Possible influence of another kind will be suggested later on Wednesday night in Music of Variety, which will feature items from that field of theatrical activity, incongruously interrupted by Cherubini's Sonata No. 3 (that, at least, being the impression I get from the brief outline of the program before me). A sad feature of the present musical scene is the almost complete divorce of "popular" music (in the broader sense, not in the narrow trade sense) from the art, concert, or "serious" kind. This is

CBC Announces New Radio Coverage

A new LPRT (low power relay transmitter) to serve the Hinton, Alberta, area, was included in plans announced recently by Alphonse Ouimet, president of the CBC, for increased radio coverage in areas not now served by the Corporation. Mr. Ouimet also announced that a separate investigation is being carried out to improve radio coverage in Alberta. Construction will commence shortly, he said, on transmitters to serve radio listeners in the Hinton area, and in the area of Wedgeport, Nova Scotia, licenses for which have been granted to the CBC. License applications have also been made to the Department of Transport for transmitters at St. Fintan's, Newfoundland; Senneterre, Quebec, and Red Lake and Bancroft in Ontario.

"The increased coverage in the form of low power relay transmitters in rural areas is in line with the CBC's policy of providing a national radio service to as many Canadians as possible," Mr. Ouimet said. He said the proposed stations would be in addition to seventy-three other LPRT's now operating at various points across the country.

The Corporation is now ready to file applications for permission to establish eight additional LPRT's. Seven of these are in British Columbia, at Proctor-Balfour, Hundred Mile House, Merritt, Houston, Lake Windermere, Nakusp and certs. Tradition is hard to break, though, and Dr. Renshaw likens playing a morning raga in the evening to hearing Christmas music in the middle of June—it simply isn't done, although there is no sound musical reason for not doing so.

The amount of study and hard work that Indian musicians put in to gain mastery of their instruments and techniques is remarkable. One of the instrumentalists on the program tells how he worked for three or four years, nine hours a days, practising a single raga. "And I doubt very much whether the finest of our American jazz drummers could duplicate the intricate rhythmical patterns of their percussion instrumentalists," adds Dr. Renshaw.

Some of the exponents of both classical and popular Indian music to be heard will be the singer Ustad Amir Khan, bass; Mrs. Utpala Sen, a singer specializing in light and devotional music; Ustad Bismillah Khan, who plays the shanai;

TRANS-CANADA MATINEE

The Totem Carvers. Matinee today features two items under the title "The Totem Carvers." Elinor Glenn talks about the carving of totem poles on the west coast of Canada, and mentions particularly Chief Mungo Martin, whom she calls without a doubt the finest totem carver alive today. Mrs. Glenn is a Vancouver housewife and freelance broadcaster. Mungo Martin is the uncle of Ellen Neel, who, with her husband and children has been demonstrating the art of totem carving at the Stratford Festival this year. During a visit to Stratford, Matinee's hostess, Betty Tomlinson, talked with Mrs. Neel, her husband, Ted, and their thirteen-year-old daughter, Bitty. The Neels make their home at Aldersgrove, 30 miles east of Vancouver, and their business has been established for about 15 years.

"Phooey On The Fair Sex." John Windsor feels the fair sex is sadly misinformed in its views of the poor male, who is pictured at best as a selfish brute. He sees signs, however, that many of the fair sex are realizing the error of their ways—for example, some husbands are even allowed nowadays to get up and get their own breakfast. John Windsor is a Vancouver freelance writer and broadcaster.

Daily features . . . News commentary by Elmore Philpott of Vancouver, recorded musical selections by Francine Campbell of Vancouver, and a reading by David Hughes from Jessie L. Beattie's "The Split In The Sky," a novel about a young Indian boy who leaves the reservation to go out to work. When he returns, he falls in love with an Indian girl, who wants to remain in the reservation. Adapted for radio by Charlotte Moore of Duncan, B.C.

MUSIC OF INDIA

Professor Dwaran Venkataswami Naida, violinist; Ravi Shankar, sitar; and Ali Akbar Khan, sarode virtuoso.

Among those interviewed by Dr. Renshaw you will hear two Indian musicologists: Professor Aambamoorthy and Professor Diodhar.

A brief glossary may aid in visualizing the instruments:

Sitar: a plucked stringed instrument, fretted and having about 19 strings.

South Indian Flute: a traverse bamboo high-pitched flute.

Mirdangam: a drum, played with the fingers and having two faces. South Indian classical.

Shanai: a kind of oboe.

Sarode: plucked stringed instrument without frets.

Violin: no different from the western instrument but usually tuned about a third lower.

North Indian Flute: traverse low-pitched bamboo flute like our flute in G.

South Indian Veena plucked fretted stringed instrument.

Tabla: a pair of finger played drums.

Tampura: a plucked stringed instrument supplying the background drone.

Carl Little of the CBC production staff was responsible for making the series possible, while editing and other studio work was done by Hugh Davidson. The musical recordings, which are of exceptional brilliance, were produced by Dr. Rosette Renshaw herself, in India.

Axon was awarded the George Cross posthumously the following May.

This is the modern tale of heroism The Ballad of John Axon sings about. Writing of it in the BBC Radio Times producer Charles Parker says: "You will find that we take liberties with conventions you may cherish, blending jazz and the organum, austere English ballad with banjo, guitar, harmonica; dispensing with acted dialogue or formal narration and relying upon the real people like Mrs. Axon, or fireman Scanlon, to tell their story simply and directly; but yet merging this speech into song and effects sequences so that without specific recourse to flashback the listener can share emotionally in the experience as it is related to him." The program is not only a tribute to a contemporary hero—and through him to all men who "serve the iron road"—but an exciting new broadcast form.

NEW RADIO COVERAGE

Salmo. The eighth is at Haliburton, Ontario. The mountainous terrain of British Columbia, and the existence of many communities in valleys where normal radio reception is not possible, make the need for LPRT's in this province especially acute.

The granting of the licenses for all these installations is, as usual, subject to the approval of the Department of Transport and the Board of Broadcast Governors.

The CBC has 19 other locations under investigation for possible installation of low power transmitters.

Areas chosen for LPRT locations represent the findings of detailed surveys which are being continuously made for all parts of Canada. Studies take into account population increase or decrease, new television and radio stations going into operation, and the cost per household of providing a service.

Canadian radio is now available to 97 per cent of the country's population.

TRANS-CANADA MATINEE

"Noah's Flood." Is a new Children's Opera written by Benjamin Britten and recently performed in Vancouver with great success. Laurence Nowry interviewed some of the children and studied the problems of working with so many children from the viewpoint of the director and choreographer. Mr. Nowry is a Vancouver freelance writer and broadcaster. He was a founding officer of the Pacific Federation of Film Societies in 1955, has played an active role in the Vancouver Film Festival since its inception in 1958, and has been associated with Extension Department activities at the University of British Columbia.

Animal Characters. "Montgomery" says Happy Bonnell, "holds a most unusual record." So far as she knows, he is the only monkey ever to be apprehended by the police for driving without a license. Mrs. Bonnell is "Happy" to a large family of people and animals at Newmarket, Ontario, and she puts a certain premium on being herself, and being different. Perhaps that is why her friends—both animal and human—involve her in the wildest escapades which must be heard to be believed. Mrs. Bonnell has been heard frequently on Matinee since its early days.

The Last Matriarchy. No white person is allowed to stay after nightfall on the islands of San Blas, described as the last matriarchy in the world. Although these islands are only 75 miles from Panama City, they are virtually inaccessible. They were, however, visited by Dr. Laura Hunter MacKenzie, who tells Matinee listeners of this fascinating experience. Dr. MacKenzie is assistant professor of English at the University of British Columbia, and is a specialist on the ballad on which she wrote her Ph.D. thesis.

isn't so great in later burnings, unless you add a lot of fresh fuel.

Skippy the dog supervises every pit-cooking affair in our backyard, smacking his chops over the meat bundles as they come from the uncovered pit and begging for a share. He doesn't approve of us cooking fish, because Skippy doesn't like fish. However, we've learned that our pit-cooker can convert boney fish into delectable fare. All the sharp bones of pike and wall-eye, perch and gold-eye, or boughten haddie or halibut turn to the softest calcium during the long, twelve hour cooking period. We find that most poultry needs strips of fat bacon plastered over lean parts to keep it juicy. Better still, cut up a chicken into serving portions, place it in a clean honey pail, add salt, pepper, and butter, sprigs of parsley or whatever herbs you like, then punch steam-holes in the lid and wrap the can with wet newspaper to insulate it before placing in the pit. We've cooked beans and plum puddings by using can containers, and the results are marvelous.

Once you get the hang of it, pit-cooking is easy. You can share the fire with Skippy dog, neighbourhood children, and a dozen varieties of fire-watching birds who'll come to scold and remain to marvel. You can hoe the garden while the fire is burning, or mow the lawn, or chat with visitors who'll share Skippy's fascination of the bright and dancing flames. Next noon-day, or whenever the the twelve hour period of cooking has ended, you'll dine on meat, fish, turkey or vegetables prepared to perfection by this age-old, but always efficient, hole in the ground cooker.

The world's present difficulties of nutrition are not by any means due only to lack of food—much, very much, is due to the misuse or, inadequate use of existing foods.—Professor Fraser Brockington speaking in the BBC General Overseas Service.

a modern development, for a parallel to which you have to return to the cleavage between the music of the church and the music of the "folk," in medieval times. These two influenced each other as time went by, to the extent that they eventually merged, and by the time of the classical masters there was only one kind of music, used indifferently in court or tavern, theatre or church. (One of Handel's oratorios was given, with his sanction, in a London "pub"—as it would now be called; and Mozart, it is said, liked to hear his works performed in ball-rooms.) Subsequent changes of attitude, however, fostered at first by the Romantic movement and later by the experiments of modernity, split the art into the opposing camps with which we are unhappily familiar — to the point where, not so long ago, to proclaim yourself a supporter of one automatically excluded you from the other. Mutual influence is difficult in these circumstances; but there are signs of a new rapprochement, and we may yet hear "My Baby's a Wow" in a twelve-tone-serial setting. . . .

RED RIVER JAMBOREE

on Music Makers '58, The United Way Show and Happyland.

Along the way Olie Alto dropped out due to business pressure and Dick Carr added his vocal talents as well as doing the arrangements and accompaniment.

The Altones have striven for and achieved a "sound" of their own. It's an adaptable sound that suits the Red River Jamboree, just as well as the oldtime Happyland series. All the boys like to relax on the golf links where Bert leads them with scores in the high 70's and low 80's; Andy has an unusual gift for playing practically any musical instrument; Brian is a sportsman and once considered a professional hockey career, and Dick has always been a musician.

Accordion virtuoso Ted Komar is "top hand" for the Selkirk Settlers who provide background and dance music for Red River Jamboree. Ted made his debut at the age of ten on the very first CBC Good Deed Club program. That was in 1940. Since then he has performed on innumerable radio programs, the most recent being the Georges LaFleche Show, Prairie Schooner, Polka Party and the Three Minstrels.

His television log includes such programs as First Nighter, Happyland, Cabaret and Dances of the Nation. Other highlights of Ted's career include a Western Canadian tour with the Bob Hope Show; an appearance on Pick The Stars; and a guest performance on the Vancouver TV program Burns Chuckwagon.

He also runs the Ted Komar Accordion School, which has an enrollment of about 300 students. He is a native Winnipegger, married, and has a boy, age three . . . and when music allows time, Ted likes to play golf, fish, or take home movies.

Jo Johansson, one of Winnipeg's qualified square dance callers, brings back to Red River Jamboree the singing calls which contributed so much to the popularity of Swing Your Partner. Jo first learned square dancing from his wife's cousin some eleven years ago. He has helped found several clubs in Winnipeg and now instructs the Scona Whirls in Transcona, Manitoba. He has frequently performed on Winnipeg's Rainbow Stage and this year was in charge of all square dancing at the Manitoba Mosaic, a colourful ethnic festival held at the Rainbow Stage.

His ability did not escape the CBC program planners from Winnipeg when a caller was needed for the Swing Your Partner series. Though he had never been before television cameras, Jo had an easy informal TV manner that fitted in perfectly with the format of the show.

Following Swing Your Partner Jo had published a book of square dance calls, including mostly those used on his TV show and adding his own clever improvisations.

Jo performed on the Country Hoedown program when it originated in Winnipeg in June of 1958, and on several occasions on the local Saddle Songs show.

Born in the fishing town of Gimli, Manitoba, in 1928, Jo is now married and has three children, Judy 6, Nancy 4, and Derek 3.
